

Frankenmuth Insurance Shares Safety Resources as Commercial Policyholders Reopen for Business

As states continue to lift or ease executive orders and allow more business owners to resume operations, we recognize that our commercial policyholders may have questions and concerns about protecting their businesses as they prepare to reopen.

To help your agency and our commercial policyholders navigate the process of reopening their businesses safely, Frankenmuth Insurance has developed a policyholder handout that offers general guidelines from resources such as OSHA and the CDC to help reduce potential exposures and protect our policyholders' employees, customers and assets.

To view and download our policyholder handout, please click here. We highly encourage agencies to save the PDF provided and share this information with their commercial policyholders, preferably as an email attachment for contactless distribution. Our safety experts also have additional tips for how policyholders can reopen their business after a temporary closure, which you can also share with policyholders directly from our website using the social sharing buttons or email option.

We hope this guide serves as a helpful resource for your agency and our mutual customers as they plan for reopening their businesses. For legal questions or recommendations for protecting their businesses, policyholders should consult with their own attorneys.

Should you have any questions, please contact your field manager, underwriter or Loss Control consultant.
